

Please Stop Inviting Jim to this Blog

Gym progress update (June)

How I feel after a workout :pain_and_suffering:

As a foreword, if you are named Jim, please do not feel pressured to stop reading. For everyone else let's get cracking.

So in early May (I think?) I basically said "I will go to the gym!" and shockingly I actually stuck to my word. While I ended up doing things quite a bit differently I was still able to go at least 3 days a week (Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday) and recently I've bumped that up to 5 days a week (by tacking on Saturday and Sunday).

Looking back at that blog I made some pretty simple claims that I can look back on and provide some additional context and updates:

So I decided to go Push-Pull-Legs for a few reasons...

This is a pretty quick one - yeah I still do PPL but one 5 day cycle I end up doing PPLPL where the third P is either Push or Pull depending on how sore each muscle group is.

You may have noticed that Legs have no real resting period and that is because I don't really push myself nearly as hard on those days. One reason is to avoid the dastardly sore legs + existing combo and the other reason is just because I'm so far behind on Legs that I don't think I'll need to do much to see progress...

With the routine quickly established we can go over the actual lifts...

I think the idea here was to basically outline the idea that I should be doing one compound lift along with multiple isolation exercises. While that's fine in theory I do think it's okay to have multiple compound movements especially if you kinda wanna just destroy everything efficiently. Since writing that update I did add a few more movements so if you're curious:

- Dips: It's like bench but you emphasize shoulder stability
- Pendulum Squats: Very easy on the knees and it restricts wobbly movement
- Lu Raises: One of the weirder movements but if an Olympian does it for his shoulders it's probably fine for mine right?
- Pull ups: I mostly do these when I'm feeling too lazy to go to the gym and I just keep alternating between wide, close, and sideways grips to focus on back, short bicep head, and long bicep head respectively.
- Glute Adduction/Abduction/Kickbacks: 🍰

Hopefully with more than 3 weeks of data I'll be able to have a more interesting post on the progress I've made

I did keep track but due to the nature of both how I work out and how much energy I had day-to-day, the "progress" can be taken with a large grain of salt. BUT it does make me seem like a #beast so...

Push:

- Bench: 135lbs 5 reps -> 200lbs 5 reps

Pull:

- Row: 140lbs 5 reps -> 180lbs 5 reps

Legs:

- Wait I swear I did legs I just didn't do anything consistent enough to show progress literally on Jim's SOUL I did legs please please please please trust me I'm not a liar I-

Well happy push day y'all! Hope all the Leg day enjoyers stay quietly sore when walking up the stairs while I will have the kind of power you vibe with, the kind that keeps climbing no matter what!
